Bangalore, Jul 18, 2008 (Asia Pulse Data Source via COMTEX) -- INTC | Quote | Chart | News | PowerRating -- Intel Corporation today unveiled a digital artwork project called 'World Mural Project' that captures the vision of young people on how computers will transform the globe over the next 40 years, the chip giant said.

The project is a web-based digital art piece that includes visual and written contents from Intel Computer Clubhouse Network - a worldwide after-school community-based technology learning programme, Intel said in a statement.

The project, launched as a part of the company's 40th anniversary celebrations, "exemplifies how computers can provide youth in under-served communities with powerful tools to express themselves creatively and connect with other communities globally," it added.

Working closely with about 300 Intel volunteers at 70 Clubhouses around the world, more than 500 young people across countries submitted graphic design tiles that were incorporated into an overall mural design, it said.

Intel added it has engaged renowned digital muralist Favianna Rodriguez to oversee the creative process and provide guidance to the project.

Common themes represented in the mural are trends toward smaller, more mobile computing, green technology that are environment-friendly, more responsive technology in health care and education, and Virtual travel.
